

By continuing to browse or by clicking "I Accept Cookies" you agree to the storing of first-party and third-party cookies on your device. By agreeing to the use of cookies on our site, you direct us to disclose your personal information to our third party service providers for the purposes for which we collect your information.

I Accept Cookies

Home >> Entertainment >> Arts & Culture

Artist discovers 'Sounds of Silence' in new watercolor show

English contemporary painter Tim Bavington at his new Squid Sounds of Silence exhibit on Wednesday, Nov. 8, 2017, in Las Vegas. Benjamin Hager Las Vegas Review-Journal/aberningphoto

By Carol Cling Las Vegas Review-Journal
November 11, 2017 - 1:19 pm

Don't miss the big stories. Like us on Facebook. Like 274x

Updated November 11, 2017 - 7:40 pm

Artist Tim Bavington has learned two things in three years of teaching at UNLV. First, "I'm surprised by how much I love it," he admits. Especially because "I spent 25 years studiously avoiding teaching."

The second thing he learned: how much he enjoys painting watercolors.

Entertainment NEWS YOUR WAY
Sign up for your free daily Entertainment Update newsletter.

EMAIL SIGN UP

By signing up you agree to our Privacy Policy and Terms of Service. Unsubscribe at any time.

"I was teaching it, and it occurred to me, 'Why don't I do this?'" Bavington says. So he did.

The result: "Sounds of Silence," an exhibit of new watercolors at MCQ Fine Art through Jan. 5.

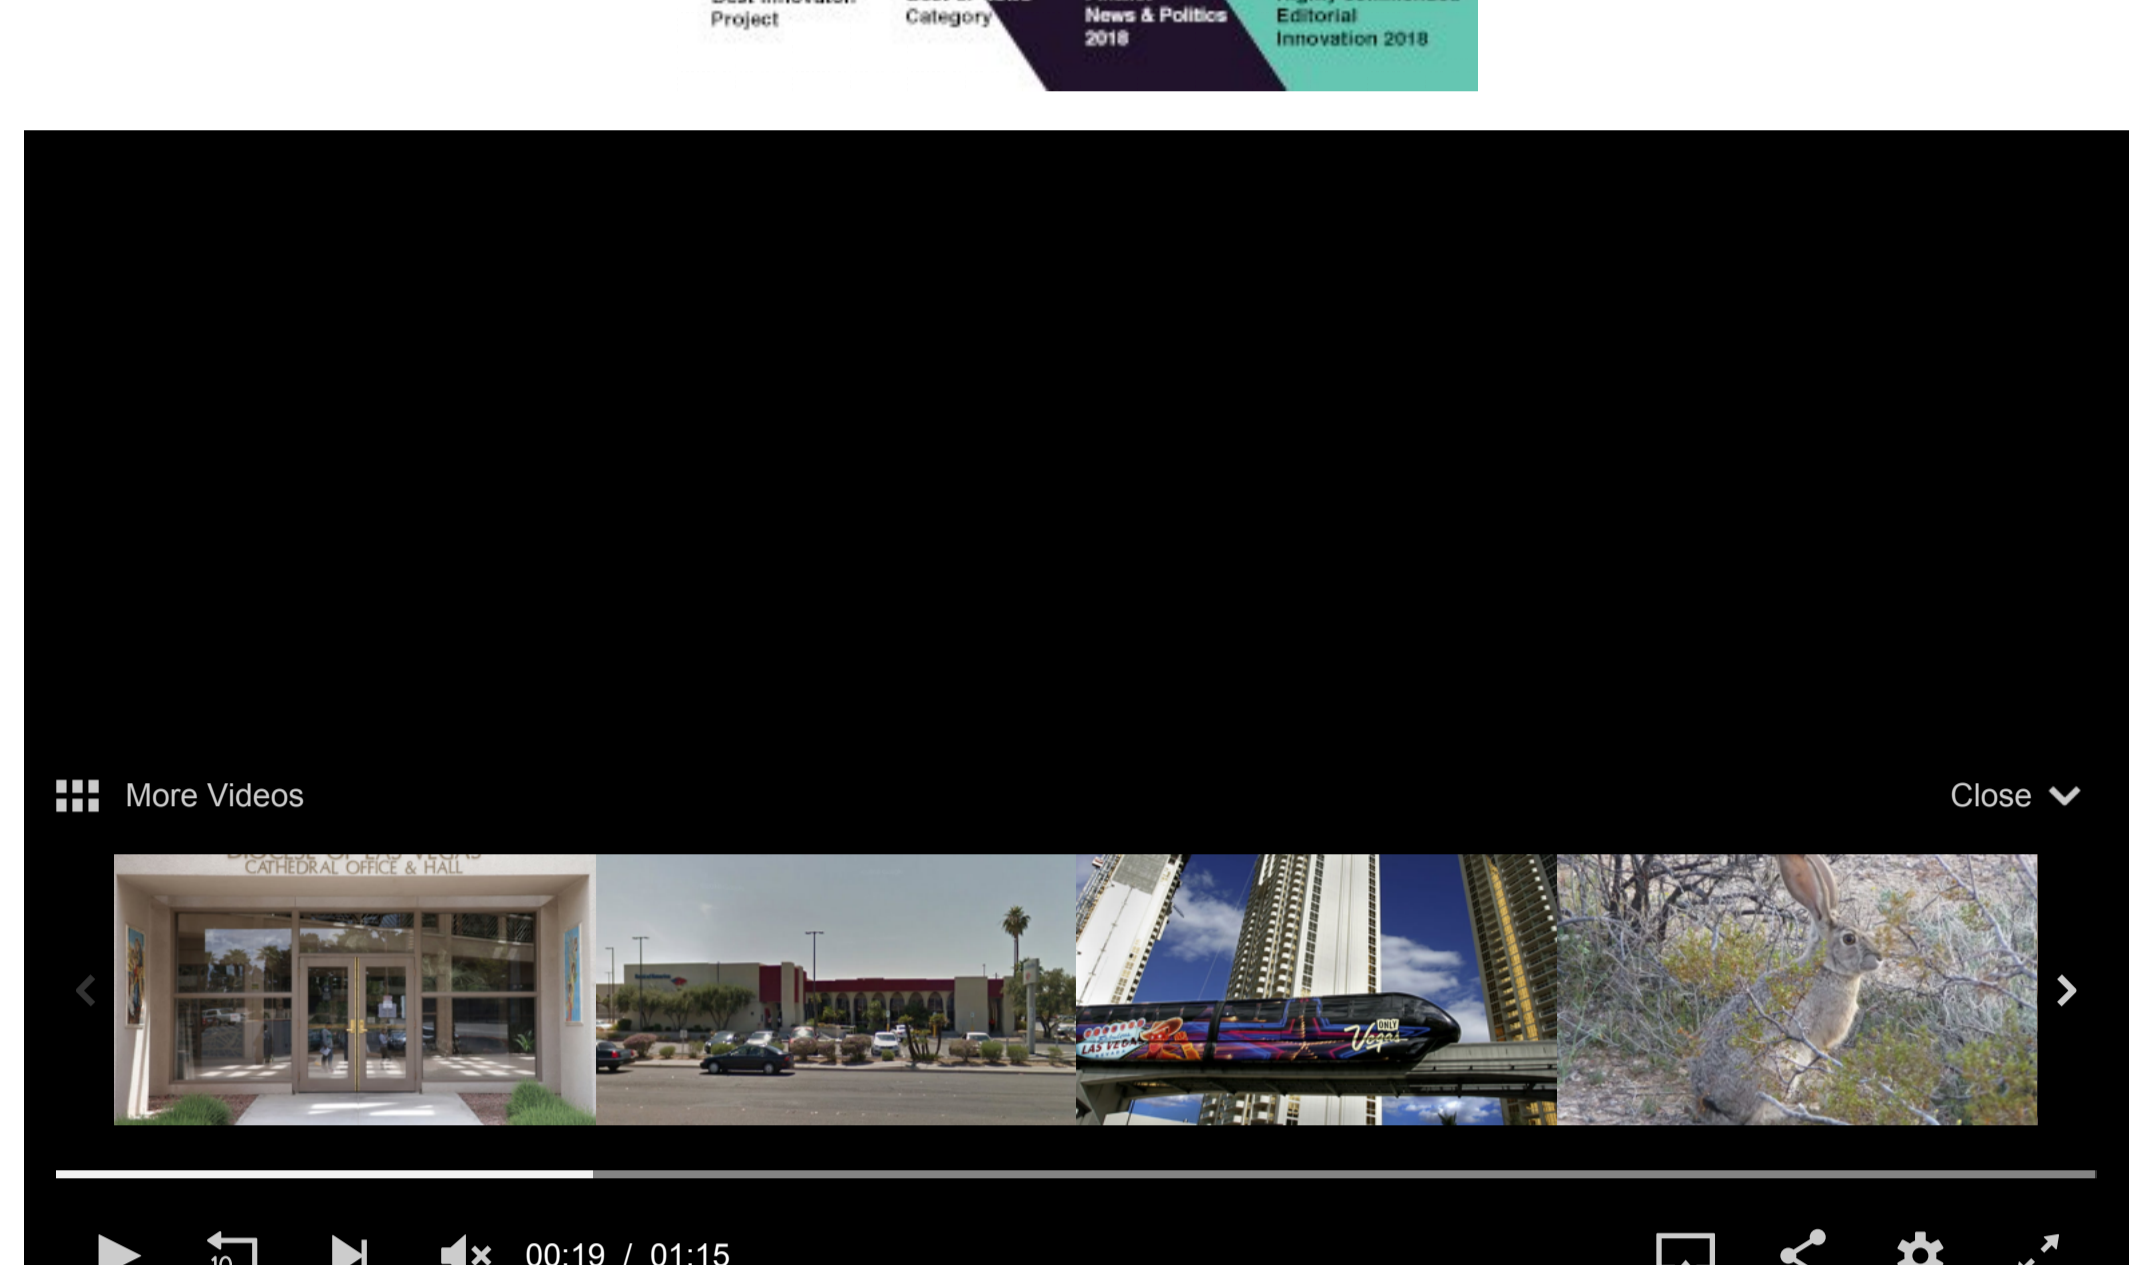

Only Bavington's second gallery show in his adopted hometown of Las Vegas, "Sounds of Silence" finds the England native returning to his trademark method and style: translating elements of popular songs into geometric stripes. (It's the same approach Bavington used to create "Pipe Dream," his Symphony Park sculpture inspired by Aaron Copland's "Fanfare for the Common Man.")

In the past, Bavington usually created his canvases by spraying them with acrylic paint, giving them a bright, hard-edged look. (He's also done pastel drawings.)

The new "Sounds of Silence" works, by contrast, display an "irregularity in line and texture," resulting in a "much more painterly, much more loose" approach, according to MCQ Fine Art's Michele Quinn. "This is Tim going, 'don't worry about where the lines go.'"

"Tim Bavington: Sounds of Silence"

When: 9 a.m.-5 p.m. weekdays and by appointment, through Jan. 5
Where: MCQ Fine Art, 620 S. Seventh St.
Admission: Free
Information: mcqfineart.com

For Bavington, "I love the liquidity of the watercolors," he says, citing "the delicacy and transparency" of the new works.

"It's a different kind of freedom — that's why I like it," he explains. "To use brushes again is just wonderful. It's invigorating and it's inspiring, to discover something new."

Despite the different medium, certain things remain the same in Bavington's work. "Not everybody can handle this much color in a work and get away with it," Quinn says, pointing out the "irregularity in line and texture" that characterize the "Sounds of Silence" paintings.

As always, Bavington's works are named after the musical works they're based on, from the George Harrison-inspired "Give Me Love," "Give Me Peace" and "My Guitar" (as in "While My Guitar Gently Weeps") to the Carter Family's "Wildwood Flower."

In choosing songs for artistic interpretation, "I pick songs I like," Bavington explains, describing it as "a Warholian or pop art approach. I like how the title evokes a reaction and response in viewers."

Bavington's been following the music-inspired methodology for 15 years, building a national and international reputation with works that are now in numerous museum collections (including New York's Museum of Modern Art) and featured in galleries from coast to coast.

For "Tone Poems," Bavington's recently concluded solo show at New York's Morgan Lehman gallery, he used songs with single colors in them, such as Jimi Hendrix's "Purple Haze."

Bavington "can always find inspiration in music," he says. In that, however, he says he's no different than anyone else, noting how others' "lives are constantly influenced by music. I just happen to be a painter."

Bavington reflects on memorial commission

It's not the kind of commission Tim Bavington ever contemplated — or wanted.

But when organizers of a "Vegas Cares" benefit concert approached the artist about creating a public memorial for victims and first responders following the Oct. 1 shooting on the Strip, Bavington agreed to do exactly that.

"I don't know how I could say no," he comments. "It's an honor" and "an incredible thing to be asked to do."

Although "you don't want to have to contemplate even doing it in the first place," Bavington says, "art does have the power to bring healing and catharsis."

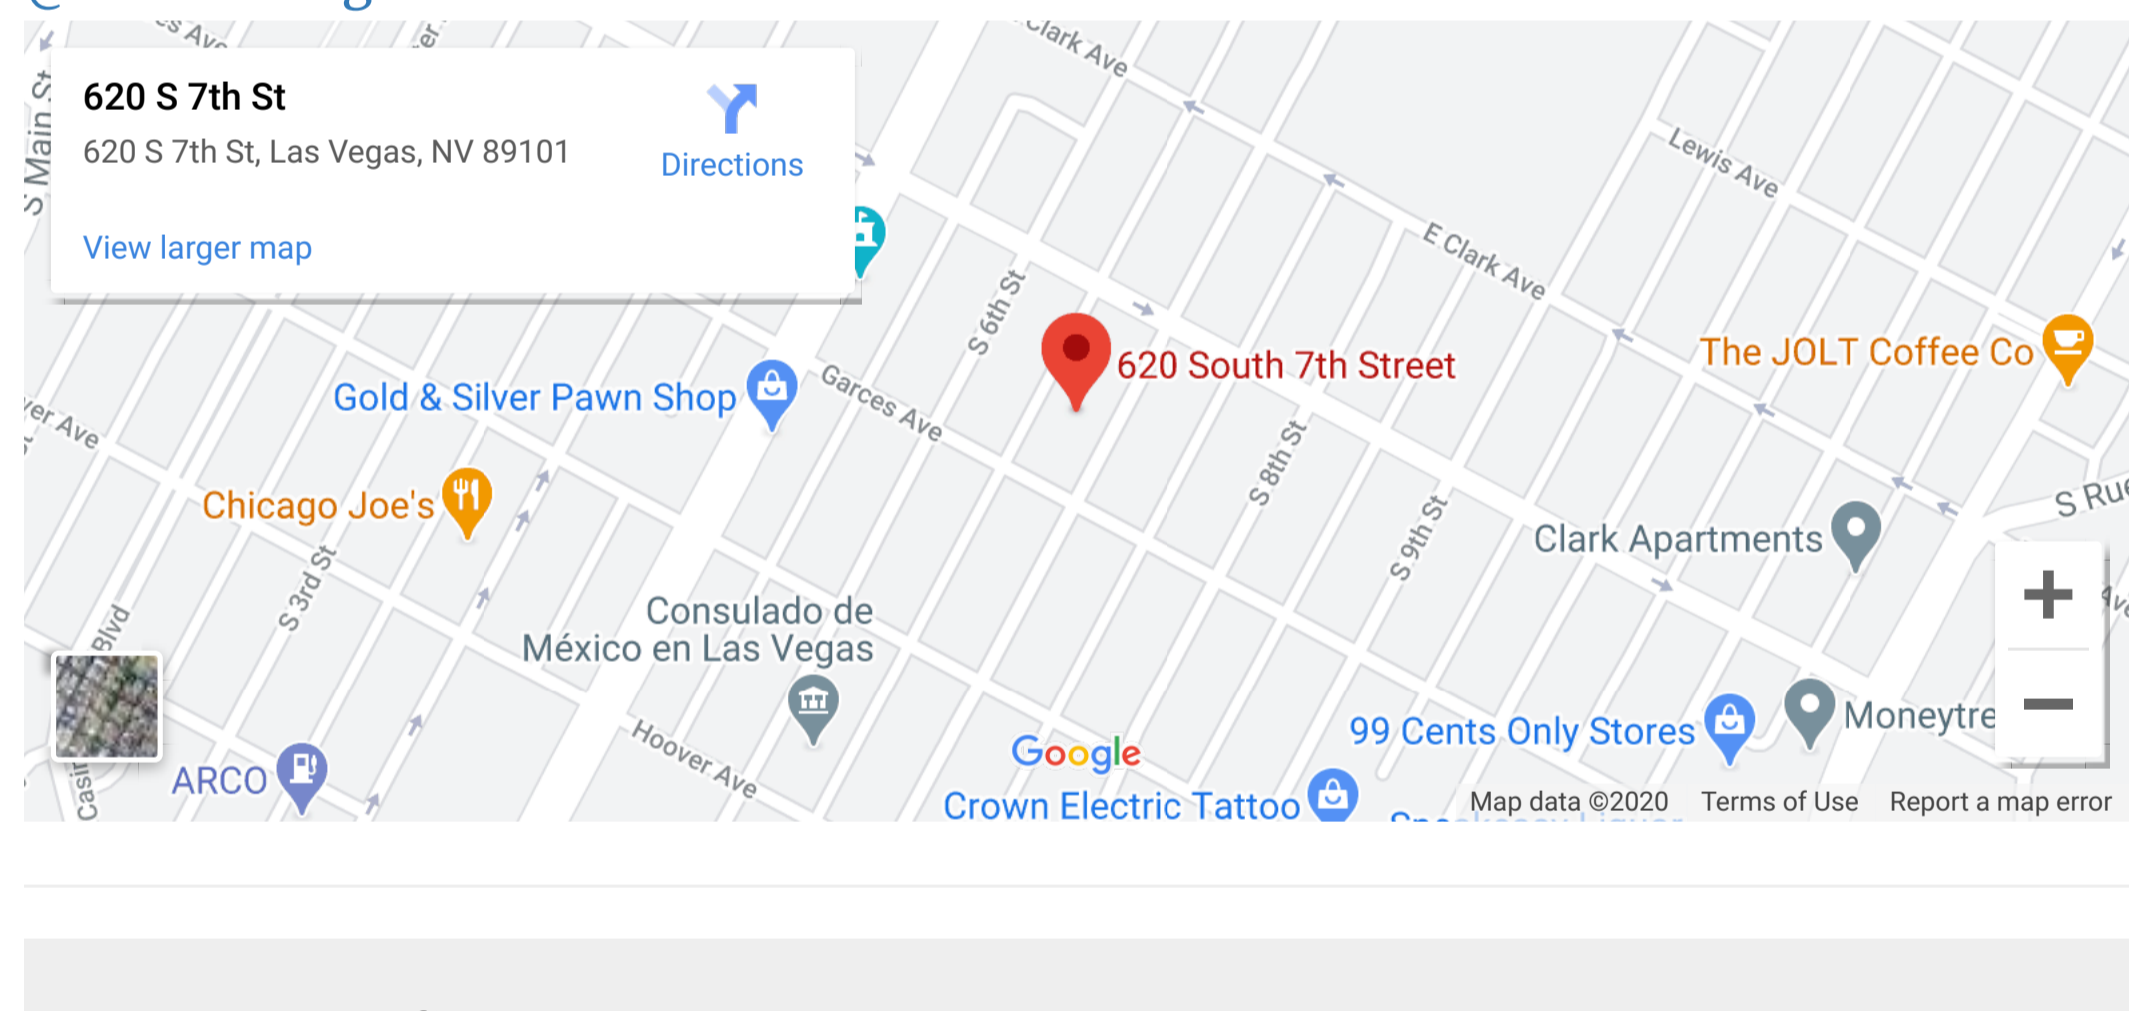

The Nov. 5 "Vegas Cares" benefit concert at The Venetian raised more than $100,000 for the project. Performers included Jewel, whose song "Mercy" will serve as Bavington's inspiration for the memorial, which the artist expects to be "something different" than his "Pipe Dream" sculpture in Symphony Park.

As for those who question raising money for a public memorial in the first place, "there are memorials that mark every tragedy," Bavington points out. (He's donating his time; the funds raised will go toward materials for the sculpture.)

"I think the cause is absolutely worthy. A memorial would be an important thing," he says. Besides, "I like to stay out of the politics. I'm an artist. If I get asked to make some art ... I don't get into why."

Contact Carol Cling at ccling@reviewjournal.com or 702-383-0272. Follow @CarolSCling on Twitter.

Bavington reflects on memorial commission

It's not the kind of commission Tim Bavington ever contemplated — or wanted.

But when organizers of a "Vegas Cares" benefit concert approached the artist about creating a public memorial for victims and first responders following the Oct. 1 shooting on the Strip, Bavington agreed to do exactly that.

"I don't know how I could say no," he comments. "It's an honor" and "an incredible thing to be asked to do."

Although "you don't want to have to contemplate even doing it in the first place," Bavington says, "art does have the power to bring healing and catharsis."

The Nov. 5 "Vegas Cares" benefit concert at The Venetian raised more than $100,000 for the project; performers included Jewel, whose song "Mercy" will serve as Bavington's inspiration for the memorial, which the artist expects to be "something different" than his "Pipe Dream" sculpture in Symphony Park.

As for those who question raising money for a public memorial in the first place, "there are memorials that mark every tragedy," Bavington points out. (He's donating his time; the funds raised will go toward materials for the sculpture.)

"I think the cause is absolutely worthy. A memorial would be an important thing," he says. Besides, "I like to stay out of the politics. I'm an artist. If I get asked to make some art ... I don't get into why."

Live Close to Everything. Compromise Nothing.

PARK HOUSE

BEST LIVING AWARD

FINAX PROPERTIES

THE LATEST

- Mobster Frank Cullotta on his criminal past: 'It never wakes me up'
By John Katsikoulas / RJ August 22, 2020 - 8:58 pm
Frank Cullotta said if he dwelled on his criminal past, "I'd wind up in my car with a gun in my mouth."
- 'Real Bodies' exhibit at Bally's adds coronavirus content
By John Katsikoulas / RJ August 21, 2020 - 8:23 pm
A short film on COVID-19 and 3D-printed coronavirus molecules are among the new attractions.
- 'AGT' 'bad guy' Jonathan Goodwin reaches semis
By John Katsikoulas / RJ August 21, 2020 - 8:28 pm
Vegas danger artist Jonathan Goodwin says of the moment of truth with Alexis Brownley, "It's me and little Alexis. It was excruciating. She started to cry."
- Las Vegas entertainment community gathers in solidarity on Strip
By John Katsikoulas / RJ August 20, 2020 - 3:45 pm
The Entertainment Community of Las Vegas — WE/EC Vegas in shorthand — is showing its solidarity Wednesday night with a car parade and walking/standing demonstration on the Las Vegas Strip.
- Cirque has new owners, same COVID challenges
By John Katsikoulas / RJ August 19, 2020 - 4:59 pm
Cirque du Soleil CEO Daniel Lamarre says, "Today, we are prepared to build upon the successes of the past and to fulfill our mission to bring Cirque du Soleil's unique artistic vision to audiences around the world."
- O.J. Simpson takes a swing at MAGA message
By John Katsikoulas / RJ August 18, 2020 - 8:23 pm
The ex-NFL great and ex-convict says, "Correct me if I'm wrong, through all those presidents, America was great. We were the No. 1 nation there is."
- EDC, Life is Beautiful, Viva Las Vegas festivals planning ahead for 2021
By Jason Brocelyn / RJ August 20, 2020 - 3:25 pm
What's it going to take to get music festivals back in action again? Nothing is certain in these times, but the founders of EDC, Life is Beautiful and Viva Las Vegas festivals are making plans.
- Las Vegas entertainment pros set Strip car parade
By John Katsikoulas / RJ August 17, 2020 - 9:02 pm
Lighting director David Schuman says, "We are seeing the effects beyond just the production shows; it's with all the stagehands who put on live performances everywhere in the city."
- Vegas treasure 'Le Reve' was a favorite of rival producers, too
By John Katsikoulas / RJ August 16, 2020 - 7:50 pm
In many ways "Le Reve" has been the envy of Las Vegas producers. This was a show loaded with brazen investment and world-class performers, performed in a brilliantly conceived water world.
- 'Le Reve' shutdown: 'Nobody saw this coming'
By John Katsikoulas / RJ August 16, 2020 - 7:50 pm
One "Le Reve" cast member said, "I thought we were going to talk about our insurance running out," instead of the show's permanent closing.

INFO & EDITIONS
Traffic
Las Vegas Weather
eEdition
Download our apps

SOLUTIONS
Advertise with Us
Place a Classified Ad
eEdition
At The Scene

SUBSCRIPTIONS
Subscriptions
Put The Paper On Hold
Report a Delivery Issue
Newspaper Sign-Up

CONNECTIONS
Contact Us
Letter to Editor
News Tips and Press Releases

AFFILIATE PUBLICATIONS
Business Press
El Tiempo
Boulder City Review
Nevada Press

Best of Las Vegas
Park Valley Times
Nevada Press